

Results of Forced Migration Review Reader Survey 2008

FMR carried out a readership survey in 2004, which provided useful guidance for the magazine over the following years. We therefore decided to carry out another one in 2008, whose aims were:

- to help us assess the impact of FMR
- to find ways to improve the magazine
- to find out from our regular readers the issues that concern them and get suggestions for possible future themes and articles
- to know more about the readership and how FMR is used.

Summary

This survey broadly supported the strategy that FMR has been following in its themes, style, content, etc. It confirmed the breadth of FMR's readership – in type, location and scale. It confirmed that the effort and expense that goes into both the printed and the online versions is worthwhile. It also confirmed that FMR is of real use to and a prime source for a large number of people for a variety of different purposes in programming, training, advocacy and academia. Finally, and significantly, it provided a rich seam of ideas for future articles, themes and potential changes – and encouraged the editorial team by showing a high level of positive responses to the results of our work.

The annexes at the end of this report provide quantitative information for some of the information collected and list some of the text responses.

Methodology

A survey form was devised and distributed with FMR31 to all regular readers/subscribers to FMR. It was also linked from the FMR website to an electronic version of the survey on Survey Monkey. The same process was followed in the other 3 languages in which FMR appears.

The total number of responses, the printed and the electronic combined, was 244 in English, 11 in French, 53 in Spanish and 67 in Arabic. This compares with a total subscribing readership of 8160 in English, 2002 in French, 1406 in Spanish and 2128 in Arabic, and is a slightly higher level of response than to the survey in 2004. The small number of French language responses is disappointing.

The results reported here clearly cannot be claimed to represent the readership of FMR but only those who completed the survey. The results are nevertheless of some interest and have given us useful information, guidance and feedback

Results

(1)The profile of FMR readers

The first section of the survey attempted to discover information about the respondents to the survey, the type of organisation (if any) they work for, where they are based and the role or job they have.

The annex to this report contains charts of the spread of organisations and locations; what emerged was that the two largest constituencies for FMR belong, as expected, to international agencies (UN, RC and INGO) and academic institutions and local NGOs. A small but significant number of respondents work in government agencies.

While 63% of FMR subscribers are in 'the South', only 46% of those who responded to the survey are in Africa, Asia, the Middle East and Latin America/the Caribbean..

However we feel that the information and ideas obtained through the survey, while not strictly representative of the readership, are interesting and sufficiently valid to be worth reporting.

Respondents were not given multiple choice answers to the question about their role or job. Given the number of libraries that receive FMR, unsurprisingly there were a lot of Librarians who responded. The answers that other categories of reader wrote in show a great diversity within the hierarchies of all of the kind of organisations, from students (undergraduate and postgraduate) to Senior Lecturer and Professor, from Project Officer to Head of Mission and Executive Director, and so on.

(2) Access to FMR

The next section of the survey attempted to find out how FMR is accessed and if copies are shared (see annex). Both the online and the printed versions of all 4 languages (English, Arabic, French and Spanish) are widely read. The most significant finding is that over 70% of respondents share their printed copies, slightly less than half of whom shared their copy with more than 5 others, and slightly more than half of whom share it with between 2 and 5 others. Most people shared their copy by keeping it in open access (on a shelf or in a library) and we know that there are some 3370 libraries in all sorts of institutions on the distribution list.

It is important for us to have an idea of how many people actually read FMR and, while we cannot quantify it from these results of responses to the survey, it is clear that the actual readership of FMR is several times the number that are printed and distributed, especially if we add on the large number who access it online. In addition to these regular readers, who were respondents to the survey, there is also a significant and varying readership for each issue of those with a specific interest in the issue's theme.

(3) Utilisation of FMR

The survey then moved into less concrete areas, looking at the uses of FMR to its readers and polling for particular examples of its usefulness. Research and background reference were the most common uses (see Annex), and as material for advocacy and teaching next. There are readers for whom FMR helps them keep up-to-date or for whom it is of general interest, but there were also a few who use its contents to support their proposal writing or programme development.

These general conclusions were supported by the responses to the question asking about articles that had been of particular importance or interest. (See Annex for a selection of responses to these questions.) FMR's recent inclusion of more material on natural disaster induced displacement and on climate change is also positively reflected in what readers find useful.

The survey also asked respondents to say whether they look back at previous issues and the majority do at least sometimes (see Annex), with research being the most common reason for doing so. The claim that FMR has a long shelf-life is substantiated by these responses.

(4) FMR's content and style

Several questions followed that allowed respondents to agree/disagree along a scale in respect of FMR's range of subjects, themes, range of authors, balance between reflective and practical articles, and design and production qualities. In all these categories responses were overwhelmingly to agree or agree strongly that FMR's current approach is good or correct among readers of all 4 language issues.

These questions also allowed for comments alongside the responses, but there were few of these, most of which were very positive. While these results are affirming, it is also maybe disappointing that our readership could not give us more ideas for progressive changes to FMR.

Respondents were also asked for their suggestions for themes to be covered in the future and for other/different kind of material that we should include. Some of the responses were very specialised and unlikely to become themes for a full issue, although they will enable us to go back to the people who suggested them and see if they would like to author articles on these themes and/or keep a look out for the potential to publish articles from elsewhere on them. There were also some ideas that we can take up in considering themes for future issues.

Finally in this section respondents were asked if they were interested in contributing articles to FMR. 171 people responded with at least theoretical proposals to submit articles, indicating a high level of engagement of readers in participation in FMR.

(5) The FMR website

The part of the survey that looked at the use of the website, also asked which other websites respondents used. Leaving aside those who commented that they had no access, limited access or had only recently got access to the internet, it is apparent that the FMR website is widely used and for nearly half (48.9%) it is the primary source. It is also apparent that people use a variety of websites, some of which we had asked about, but we were also informed about many other websites that our readers use; this will be useful information for us to make links.

The great majority find the FMR website easy to use, and there was general enthusiasm for the indexing of articles that has been recently added to the site. There were a few additional suggestions for us to consider as the website continues to be developed.

The most common use for the website was research although many people also use it to read FMR online (see Annex).

(6) Other comments

At the end of the survey there was an open-ended opportunity for "other comments". 112 people took this opportunity, with the majority of comments being very positive and appreciative, although the great majority were vague; to receive such compliments on the quality, values and usefulness of FMR is very encouraging. (A few of these comments are also in the Annex.)

A few respondents also used this form to leave instructions for how to handle their subscription or to confirm how they used copies, in several cases multiple copies, of FMR.

Lessons

A survey such as this cannot show the impact of the magazine except either anecdotally or by arguing the likelihood of positive impact through the aggregation of positive responses and even the willingness of respondents to spend the time answering a survey explaining their use of and reactions to the magazine.

That said, the answers to this survey encourage us to continue broadly along the same lines, seeking strategically important themes for our product; ensuring that we retain a balance between the parts of the magazine devoted to that theme and to general articles; maintaining a wide range of authors; striving to continue to appeal to a broad range of readers in geography, affiliation, level of seniority, and in terms of activity.

The investment in the websites is obviously worthwhile, and there are a number of possibilities for continuing to improve them, and encouragement to do so.

A few respondents took opportunities to encourage us to seek more authors from 'the South' and more themes or articles from 'the South'. These comments largely came from respondents from outside 'the North' and show that our efforts along these lines need to be maintained, allowing for incremental rather than qualitative movement, given the general level of satisfaction with FMR as it is and has been. It should help us that the survey also shows a willingness of our readership to engage and contribute to it.

The editorial staff of FMR are very grateful to all the people who took the time and trouble to fill in this survey.

Annex

What kind of organisation respondents work in

Local NGO	22%
International NGO / Red Cross-Red Crescent	15.6%
UN / Intergovernmental	7.3%
University or Research Institute	20%
Government	11.8%
Media	1.4%
Other	8.3%
Student	9.2%
Does not work for an organisation	4.5%

Where respondents are based

Africa	21.5%
Asia	14.7%
Middle East	9.9%
Latin America / Caribbean	10.2%
UK	8%
Europe	18.4%
North America	14.2%
Australia/New Zealand	3.1%
Oceania	-

How FMR is read

Online	35.2%
Hard copy	35.9%
Both	28.9%

How many people read each copy

Only one person	23.4%
2-5 people	43.6%
more than 5 people	33%

What FMR is used for

Conferences	6.4%
Training workshops	9.1%
Research	26.5%
Advocacy	14.8%
Teaching	10.1%
Background reference	28.4%
Other	4.6%

What the FMR website is used for

Reading FMR online	30.7%
Disseminating FMR material to others	16.3%
Research	39%
Links	14%

Respondents' comments

Below are some comments drawn from the responses to various questions in the survey and throwing some light on FMR readers' responses to FMR. As respondents to the survey offered their thoughts in ways not closely targeted to the questions they were answering, this is a selection that is in no particular order and sometimes is about the current FMR and sometimes suggestions for its future.

- Thanks for a fine publication and website. Good it is in a number of languages. I am sure it is very useful to many people.
- Good work, excellent editorial, production and distribution job on precarious budget
- Many thanks for your work. IDMC is always interested to distribute copies to training workshop participants, and they are really appreciated.
- This is a great resource, thank you for all the hard work.
- FMR is really VERY useful, keep up the good work! Thank you!
- Thanks for your very valuable and useful contribution to the knowledge of such a central issue, migration.
- Congratulation with the many years of good reporting.
- Concentrate more on the south and give prominence to writers from the south
- I sincerely wish to register my heartfelt appreciation for the wonderful information service provision on a phenomenon that is experienced in almost every home in the developing world and the top quality production of this magazine.
- Please, keep it up. More grease to your elbows
- I find your magazine extremely interesting and resourceful. The fact that you have sent this to me regularly is much appreciated.
- Thank you for getting FMR issues free of charge for our library
- Great work! I really appreciate each time to read about FM and would wish I could contribute more to improve the situation of forced migrants! Thanks a lot!
- V. good resource--if a little superficial at times, due to brevity of articles. Keep up the good work!
- Thank you so much for the good and detailed information on forced migration.
- We are glad to becoming familiar with your publication. Thanks for being willing to send it to us. We are a justice center and work locally, nationally and internationally.
- Keep up the wonderful and valuable and very much needed work. Thank you.
- It is a visually attractive and accessible website.
- Although they constitute one third or more of the displaced population in many conflict-affected areas, the specific needs and vulnerabilities of displaced children are still largely neglected.
- I particularly admire the open access policy and the ready availability of the pdf's on the web.
- We will be able to write about psychological consequences of migration, with focus of persecution, torture and refugee issues
- I would be interested in using FMR as a vehicle in which to share my academic research to date.
- Some interested clergy may wish to contribute expressing personal opinions and experiences
- Politics. Migrations are never ever out of political frame.
- The dynamics of gender and repatriation.

- Personally I may not be able but I will disseminate the information to library/information researchers about the opportunities available to those who may want to, especially those with real life experiences such as the social workers and those hailing from these zones.
- No, but it is good to see a genuine interest in the search for contributors.
- Yes. I would like to write about displaced people and their reproductive rights.
- great job and layout, easy to use, colorful, makes you want to thumb/scroll through it.
- There could be more recommendations in the articles.
- For me the reflective articles are more useful, so I'd like to see more of those (but I recognise that you have a varied readership!)
- Practical? I can't remember reading a practical article!
- Maybe include a testimony of a refugee now and then. It sometimes makes it more real.
- more focus on underlying political economic causes of migration
- I think FMR needs to tackle rarely discussed issues, like issues of the right to return and uprooting of certain ethnicities from their own homelands and being replaced by newcomers, as in the case of the Australian Aboriginals and what is called as "Red Indians". In reality, there's nobody that we can call "a red Indian" person!
- Keep covering the world!
- The coverage is already quite comprehensive
- More on south-south issues. For instance, the condition of migration from south of Sahara in Maghreb.
- challenges coming ahead are good to be called to think about
- While the themes are good, I think there might be a bit too much of a focus on them. Rather, I feel like timely articles might be slipping through the cracks because they don't match the theme.
- I like that each issue focus on a particular topic, but I believe there should more space for other articles in each edition.
- I'd rather see more in-depth coverage of fewer subjects (see also below, on themes vs general articles).
- I'm not aware of any other publications that have this sort of direct and easy to understand coverage of refugees and IDPs.
- current information, insights from non-academic experts in the field/practioners, including aid workers, diplomats and others. Easy to read and not too long. Provides some policy advise/guidance in each article so that it doesn't remain a purely academic piece.
- I like very much the line and positioning of FMR: between formal rigid research and informative/ advocacy line.
- FMR is relevant, and as I said earlier, it gives a short analysis on a given topic, but does not skimp on detail. Other publications at times can be long winded. FMR also provides very current issues and from people in the field.
- As they are thematic, older versions are useful to see what the thinking was on a particular issue at a certain time.
- Good range of articles and analysis
- FMR is very well contextualized. It gives firsthand experiences, and more importantly it is people centered.
- The articles are unique
- Synthetic, easy to read articles. Very useful publication to keep updated on recent developments, research, experiences.

- FMR connects practice on the ground to broader policies.
- In-depth analysis and a wide-ranging perspective
- the academic and validated data and themes on migration
- Views of current practitioners (from field to high level) and more in-depth and different perspectives of specific crises/issues.
- a very comprehensive picture of the respective theme selected for each issue
- In addition to well-written articles I get inside information that is not available in other publications
- Some of these are issues / developments I may otherwise not hear about if it were not for FMR
- Very easy to understand, short discussion of humanitarian issues
- Different stories, different perspectives, and sometimes greater detail. The online website is particularly good with many useful links
- Quality reporting from the best in the field of forced migration.
- Quality research - specific to the field of forced migration not available elsewhere.
- Good reliable information mostly in reader-friendly language and short enough to go through quickly
- No other magazine covers this range of related phenomena, news and analysis
- FMR ... is simply an Authority in issues of Migration and Displacement.
- Views from important/salient actors in the humanitarian field, and from the field itself. I like this combination of high-level and field-level authors. Short, focused articles. I sometimes read more academic journals (JRS and RSQ) given my own academic background. Sometimes those articles are out of touch--either too far ahead on the discussion, or focusing on non-consequential points for my/our work.
- FMR is the one journal that I know of offering a wide array of subjects relating to refugees and IDPs that seems to stay current. I appreciate reading about new practices and ideas.
- The academic angle and an intellectual view. Very good for the people "on the ground" who work with refugees on a day-to-day basis.
- Views from both scholars and practitioners and their contacts.
- Range of relevant topics, a sense of reliability based on the editorial credentials.
- FMR gives me promptly and most recent topics in a certain period of time. I mean that it is such a self-renewing publication which keeps me updated regularly in a shorter period of time. Opposite to books and other specialized publications FMR is always renewing itself. It is really changing and this is the unique quality of it !
- We find the themes very original and current, just like the articles.
- The academic point of view is good for research.
- Human rights aspects of IDPs' problems. Other publications generally deal with humanitarian aspects of IDP situations.
- Well-researched articles of an appropriate length which is good for training of practitioners whom you do not want to overload with lengthy academic/scientific articles.
- International focus, vivid pictures of persons affected, the research and work being done in regard to future events anticipated
- the older FMRs have a lot of valuable information that is still relevant today, plus they are useful to see how issues/crises have evolved over time
- great short articles, maps, photos
- I really like how accessible individual articles are on your website.
- to find useful references for my own research

- They provide useful background for longitudinal studies
- We have registered the articles in our database, so that they are always available for scholars searching for topics.
- More debates pages perhaps
- A few longer articles in each issue with more in-depth coverage. More space for references/footnotes
- I prefer reading more articles that are personal experiences and less academic but I think academic and research are your specialities and I'm sure useful for some people.
- Perhaps more reference at the end of articles to state of the art tools and guidance on certain issues.
- I have no recommendations at this time. I find that the publication is well researched and professional in all areas.
- I very much like the short length and language of articles but do note that this also only allows for the author to scratch the surface of issues. I wonder if it would be possible to include a few longer articles that provide more in-depth and critical analysis of issues.
- A smaller number of longer articles maybe, as two pages is relatively short. Of course, as the email address is given, you always have the possibility to contact the author, who can then send additional material.
- I do not believe that it needs any changes. It really such a unique source both in shape and in contents !
- We are glad to have an interchange system with FMR and we find it excellent for its content, presentation and style.
- reference data for my research and teaching!
- we use FMR for promotion work.
- I read most of the articles in FMR. FMR 20 was particularly useful for me in my teaching and research as my research area is Livelihoods in conflict affected areas. Issue on Palestine also was very useful and there was a lot of similarities between Palestine and Sri Lanka context.
- Due to my particular interest on the IDPs, I have all the volumes in PDF files in my special FMR folder. I am very grateful for the opportunity of having the possibility to download all the volumes from internet.
- I've used articles on the humanitarian reform, cluster approach, profiling/idp data, housing land and property/pinhoiro principles for training workshops.
- Each issue may have it's own focus, but together they give the world the ind-depth knowledge of current crises and the overall problems that exist.
- Generally all articles are both important and interesting on assumption that their sources are both accurate and current. The magazine caters well for a variety of users vis-a-vis their information needs.
- Issue 27 on sexual violence was particularly relevant to my research at the time, but there are always articles in each issue that have relevance to my work or that I can share with others for theirs.
- Burma issue. great background reading to understand the context and design our advocacy strategy. It is also useful to see who is researching or working on what
- It broadens my view on migration issues.
- Whilst researching my dissertation, I referred to FMR a great deal for information about Chechen and Sri Lankan IDPs.
- Provides information that is difficult to access
- certain articles are relevant to my research/teaching

- It provides a short, to-the-point description of current issues affecting refugees/displaced persons. It is a good starting point for further research.
 - It helps me to catch up on the fieldwork being done in different countries.
 - I have used particular articles as references in research
 - As a resource material for students offering Refugee Studies
 - To find background documents relating to topics to be addressed in the training workshops I conduct, or to prepare specific materials or handouts to be included in training modules.
- I like to make issues of specific FMR issues when in relation to the main theme to be addressed in training events or focusing on countries where the workshop is taking place
- My PhD research is on a topic that is not well researched in my country and the articles and especially the editions on IDPs are of great importance for me.
 - I am using the FMR for researches which related to Migration and displacement and I have so many undergraduate and post-graduate (Masters Degree) students from Universities and Colleges around Addis Ababa and rarely from regions of Ethiopia who are interested and using the FMR as one of their resources for the researches activities.
 - used for research during my LLM
 - providing quick, insightful, accessible articles for a wide audience of people. background info for my research
 - Its articles are short and in plain language, which make them useful to disseminate information on particular issues related to internal displacement to workshop participants at the country level. FMR is useful for me personally to stay up to speed on forced migration issues that are beyond the immediate scope of my work on internal displacement.
 - Enhance reasearch and teaching activities
 - FMR is a key component of my doctoral research on immigration and refugee issues. The information is providing foundational knowledge for me as an academic, a researcher, adult educator, and ESL instructor.
 - We have used the materials to train fied workers on issues of Migration and forced displacement. The materials have also been useful as background information for our Newsletter.
 - It gives us background for issues to include in our future education programs.
 - Using short articles, it gives concise information on a particular subject, by both scholars and partitioners, which enlarges one's perspective.
 - In preparing reports for tribunal hearings.
 - Information contextualising individudal micro case, providing possibility to question macro statistics
 - It keeps me permanently updated on valuable researches and studies by experts from all over the wolrd.To me, FMR is a great source of knowledge and education on forced migration issues.
 - This Study Center has a scientific library that is accessed by researches of the academic world, university students, articulators of public policies, social agents and pastoral leaderships working in areas related to the human mobility. Therefore, FMR has been constantly examined as a great study source.
 - FMR has published articles that my section has submitted. It is a respected vehicle for our advocacy purposes. I have also found articles to provide more depth on current topics than I get elsewhere.

- To develop new proposal/strategy I used reference of current global issues and best practices from various resources, including FMR to develop what appropriate for my organisation.
- Integrated information into conference presentation and teaching
- It gives some baselines and references for technical people like us
- Provides a useful sources of information for students on our postgraduate MA in refugee studies
- Use in writing projects and to stay informed.
- Background information for papers and books.

- Les agradezco su existencia... les deseo lo mejor en estas fechas.
- Muy buen trabajo, espero sigan aportando materiales, ideas y preocupaciones por los temas
- Felicitarlos y animarlos a que sigan adelante, gracias por el magnifico trabajo si pudieran agregar las situaciones de otros pueblos indígenas en guerra.
- challenges coming ahead are good to be called to think about
- FMR ... is simply an Authority in issues of Migration and Displacement.
- Aporte la particularidad de una temática poco abordada y estudiada en Chile. En estos momentos, ayudan bastante las experiencias internacionales que, aunque se sitúan en contexto distintos, sirven como marco referencial que amparan otras acciones que se pueden desarrollar en escenarios locales similares.
- Buen tratamiento de los temas, de forma concisa y clara. Se da una visión muy completa en pocas líneas, dado que recoge una reflexión y estudios de temas mucho más amplios.
- Una información contrastada, de actualidad y con una tratamiento exhaustivo de la información. Además siempre intenta englobar todos los ámbitos geográficos posibles
- Una vision muy amplia y diversa del tema.
- Los artículos tienen rigor en la investigación del tema que trata.
- Una visión independiente del ámbito internacional y local en materia de migraciones forzadas, artículos críticos incluso del propio círculo de trabajo y con sugerencias concretas para mejorar esta labor.
- Artículos con información novedosa que no se encuentra en otras publicaciones, acompañados por la visión de especialista en la cuestión
- Aunque podría ser más sencillo
- Me interesaría escribir sobre el impacto en el medio ambiente generado por los desplazamientos masivos de personas, y sobre las migraciones inducidas por motivos económicos o fuertes desajustes de ese tipo al interior del estado de origen.
- Dedicar más espacio informativo al continente africano.
- Me gustaria encontrar una vision etnografica de la situacion de los refugiados, sus historias de vida y lecciones que nos muestre el transfondo humano que viven las personas en situacion de desplazamiento.
- Sería interesante la inclusión de artículos que traten sobre las migraciones forzadas por motivaciones económicas, o fuertes inestabilidades de ese tipo al interior de los estados de origen, cuestión muy frecuente en mi región.
- Seguir en la misma línea. Más información sobre Latinoamérica
- Creemos que hay una sobresaturación de artículos por tema.

- Aunque el volumen de artículos es elevado, presenta un arcoiris adecuado para forjarse una opinión independiente y realista del estado del arte en materia de desplazamiento forzado
- El procesamiento de cada revista y cada uno de sus artículos facilita la utilización en el tiempo
- Para satisfacer consultas. Es revista de referencia en esta biblioteca
- Un poco más de casos prácticos... buscar la alianza con Universidades en otras regiones.
- En principio, me parece adecuado la selección de materiales por su amplitud, diversidad y tratamiento.
- La revista corresponde a todas nuestras expectativas. Sugiero ampliar la participación de agencias del Sistema ONU en la contribución de artículos, entrevistas y etc.
- En general, considero que la Revista es seria, actual y muy útil para el trabajo humanitario.
- A veces siento que está demasiado enfocada en Africa, pero quizás las cifras de migraciones son más impactantes y dolorosas. Enfoques en América Latina bienvenidos! (migraciones por razones económicas, con fines de trata, trabajo esclavo y por supuesto el desplazamiento/refugio por el conflicto colombiano, son temas importantes
- Que no sean ediciones temáticas. Que sí tenga un tema principal pero que la mayoría de artículos no gire sobre ese tópico.
- Quizás mas ilustraciones... el impacto de las imágenes llegan más
- En general todos los temas son interesantes tanto los de análisis como los de experiencias concretas en terreno, es interesante la conjunción entre lo teórico y lo práctico, así como las tendencias y proyecciones que presentan en algunos artículos.
- Al ser números monográficos, valora la visión general
- Nos actualiza en el debate de las Migraciones Forzadas para tener un mejor entendimiento a la hora de definir políticas en la materia
- Facilita el trabajo investigativo y la oportunidad de profundizar e indagar en la práctica del ejercicio profesional aquello se ve reflejado en el documento.
- Uso por los lectores de la Biblioteca
- La revista sirve mucho como texto de referencia de los temas más actuales en que trabajamos. Nos sirve para preparar presentaciones, para diseñar y escribir nuestros proyectos, preparar conferencias, artículos, además de actualizar a nosotros con relación a los temas trabajados en cada edición.
- es muy util, y me sirve como referencia en mi que hacer como academico
- Para talleres y para ideas de redactar artículos con temáticas distintas, en nuestro contexto.
- La revista nos da una visión global sobre el problema de las migraciones forzadas y de las diversas discusiones que se dan en este ambito; con esta visión sin dejar de ser locales, es una forma de superar el localismo (una mirada centrada sobre los problemas particulares).
- Sirve para analisis comparativos
- Generalmente nos sirve para saber que pasa en otras areas del planera, y sacar datos para exposiciones en talleres, foros y conferencias.
- En mi caso resulta ser profundamente informativa, ayudando a construir nuevas investigaciones.

- La revista es utilizada como material de apoyo en docencia e investigación por estudiantes y profesores.
- marca la pauta de una nueva línea de investigación. Permite estar al corriente de los últimos trabajos.
- Es una herramienta de consulta para nuestros temas de investigación
- En la docencia de estudiantes de medicina
- referente para el alumnado de 2 másters presenciales y 2 online sobre Desarrollo y Globalización, así como para estudiantes de NOHA (Universidad Deusto) Nivel interno

- Nao tenho nenhuma sugestao para grandes mudançãas. talvez seria acrescentar um espaço em cada edição onde seja apresentado um resumo de como esta a mobilidade humana em cada continente. Um Resumo. Ex: Migrações internas-focos de conflictos- situação de exclusão-etc.
- Como trabalhamos com refugiados além da informação pessoal e da equipe utilizo a revista para orientar estagiarios de graduação e pós graduação sobre o tema das migrações e sobretudo do refugio. Além de utilizalos em debates e exposições em publico

- Votre revue est passionnante. Merci, continuez !
- je tiens tout simplement à remercier le service de redaction de revue des migrations forcés pour la générosité qui a accordé à notre ONG Association d'Entraide Médico-Sociale AEMS-ASBL sur la liste des ONG bénéficiaires de recevoir régulièrement cette publ
- Merci pour le travail que vous faites. Votre revue est de plus en plus consultees dans notre bibliotheque.
- Traitement "en profondeur" des thématiques, qualité des analyses
- RMF est par excellence une parfaite mine d'infos sur les questions liées a l'homme et son milieu
- Prèsque toute les informations sur le sujet de réfugié et les le déplacement forcé
- Plaidoyer auprès de décideur politique et autorités locales
- Atelier de formation de nos membres+A33
- Pour les exposes et les cours du public de notre bibliotheque
- en voulant developper des idee pour les formations, pour les redactions des projets