Latin America and the Caribbean: building on a tradition of protection

FMR 56, October 2017

The region of Latin America and the Caribbean has long demonstrated hospitality towards those fleeing conflict and persecution within the region and from further afield. The authors of 31 articles in this issue examine how, faced with newer causes of displacement such as the violence of organised criminal gangs and the adverse effects of climate change, Latin American and Caribbean countries are continuing to expand and adapt their protection laws and mechanisms in order to address these and other situations of displacement and to meet the differing needs of affected populations.
