All displaced people need some form of shelter, and circumstances dictate that in reality not much of it conforms to the typical picture of a tent or tarpaulin nor meets official standards. The types of shelter and settlement responses found, employed and created by, and created for, displaced people profoundly affect their experience of displacement. It should provide some protection from the elements and physical security for those who dwell in it, and the articles in this issue of FMR give a glimpse of just some of the many ways this is possible.

But displaced people also seek safety, comfort, emotional security, some mitigation of risk and of the unease that accompanies being displaced, and even, as time passes, some semblance of home. Displacement also disrupts community but even a temporary shelter can conform to people’s notions of home and belonging. The re-forming of community – whether from among one’s own people or among other displaced people and, importantly, among those into whose place one has been displaced – is an essential part of successful, satisfactory and sustainable shelter.

The articles in this FMR address these factors from a range of points of view: those of hosts, of agencies, of designers and of displaced people. The complexity of approaches to shelter both as a physical object in a physical location and as a response to essential human needs has engaged many humanitarian actors and, increasingly, designers, architects and innovators too.

Technical shelter guidelines are widely available, so we have not attempted to include them here; instead we have selected articles that show some of how the guidelines play out in reality. Other articles show where and how displaced people establish themselves, how design considerations relate to the social and cultural reality of those who will live in the shelters, and how people make, inhabit, transform and adapt their shelter and settlement.

We would like to thank Thomas Whitworth and Nina Birkeland of the Norwegian Refugee Council and Tom Scott-Smith of the Refugee Studies Centre for their assistance as advisors on the feature theme of this issue.

We are also very grateful to the following for their financial support for this issue: Better Shelter, Happold Foundation, Hunter and Stephanie Hunt, Norwegian Refugee Council, Open Society Foundations, Suricatta Systems, Swiss Federal Department of Foreign Affairs, UN-Habitat and UNHCR (DPSM). All current and recent FMR donors are listed below.

Thank you to all FMR's donors
FMR is wholly dependent on external funding to cover all of the project’s costs, including staffing. We are deeply appreciative to our current and recent donors for their support and collaboration.

We would also like to thank all those who have supported the production and dissemination of FMR by making individual donations through our online giving site at www.fmreview.org/online-giving. Even small donations help to keep FMR going, so please do consider making a donation.

Please use us!

We are here to support your work and to facilitate learning but it only works with your involvement as readers, donors, communicators and writers.

What particular area of your knowledge and experience might you usefully share with FMR’s global readership? Email us at fmr@qeh.ox.ac.uk with a few sentences about your proposed article and we will give you feedback and advice.

Articles can be as short as 600 words, or as long as 2,500 words, and you don’t have to be an experienced writer – we are happy to work with you to develop your piece. You are welcome to submit articles and email us in English, Arabic, French or Spanish.

See www.fmreview.org/writing-fmr for ideas of suitable topics for FMR, and guidance about writing.

Accessing this magazine in print or online

FMR is accessible in a number of formats in English, Arabic, Spanish and French.

The full issue and all the individual articles in this issue, for example, are online free of charge in html, pdf and audio formats at www.fmreview.org/shelter.

FMR 55’s accompanying digest (which provides introductions to all articles plus QR/web links) is also available online and in print in all four languages.

Need a print copy? If you would like printed copies of either the magazine or the digest, in any language, please email us at fmr@qeh.ox.ac.uk, specifying what you need and your full postal address.

The value of learning

FMR is funded entirely by donations and grants, including donations from individuals who read FMR. Could you help keep FMR going so that it can continue to support learning through the sharing of knowledge and experience?

Even small donations help. For individuals, we suggest an annual contribution of £30 / US$37 / €35. Please visit our secure online giving site at http://bit.ly/supportFMR
